HON. E. W. CARMACK.

His Condition Decidedly More Hopeful Than It Has Been.

Congressman Carmack, who was reported better in our last issue, took a sudden turn for the worse last Friday, and for the two or three days following was critically ill, his temperature ranging between 104 and 105. But Tuesday he began to show some slight improvement; and Wednesday his symptoms were still better, and yesterday his symptoms and general condition was better than at any time since his extreme illness began. His temperature varied, but the average was not high, and frequent heavy perspirations indicated a breaking of the fever. We are glad to be able to report and know that thousands of his friends will read it with real pleasure. But he is by no means a well man yet, and it will perhaps be a week or two before he will be allowed to see visitors, or permitted to look at his mail.
